

Published based on New Honda CB Unicorn Launched

New Honda CB Unicorn Launched

One of the most talked about concept from the 2010 Auto Expo was undoubtedly the Unicorn concept. Enthusiasts had high hope that the Unicorn would get radical changes when the Japanese firm launches an upgraded version soon. However all hopes are set to crash as Honda has disappointed yet again with the new Unicorn. First and foremost the bike will now be called the CB Unicorn (which seems to be the biggest change of them all) and will feature the much talked about viscous air filter, which needs less maintenance. The engine remains unchanged but has been updated to meet the stricter emission norms which go into effect next month. The company has also introduced a new colour Pearl Siena Red and has priced the CB Unicorn at Rs. 69,058/- (on-road, Mumbai).

What do you think has gone wrong with the Unicorn? What do you think should Honda have done with this model?

You can also find this article published on New Honda CB Unicorn Launched, and on the tag pages Honda CB Unicorn.