The upcoming 2012 Mercedes-Benz M-Class has been unveiled. The new M-Class which now sports a new design, along with being longer and slightly wider is expected to be launched in India at the 2012 Auto Expo. The 2012 model not only looks sharper, but will drive better too. Interiors have been given a thorough refresh, taking cues from the big daddy from the Mercedes stable, the S-Class. Revised engines will debut in the new M, with the car getting a host of fuel saving technologies. The company will offer six different off-road modes just like what Land Rover does. They include automatic, off-road 1, off-road 2, trailer, sport and winter. Mercedes continues to focus on safety with the new M-Class which will offer nine airbags as standard. Lane keep and blind spot assist along with night vision system will be standard across the model range. The rear seat is expected to offer better comfort, which the current version lacks. The new M-Class should set things straight by addressing the short comings of the current model.
