Volkswagen Polo Facelift Around The Corner

There has been an all of a sudden increase in the spottings of Volkswagen Polo with test plates in and around Mumbai and Pune. The company has been testing a new version of the Polo for quite some time now and we had uncovered this back in May, showcasing the new features of the upcoming model. The increase in the spottings of the car suggests that the launch is just around the corner. The new Maruti Suzuki Swift has certainly impacted the sales of the Polo to a certain extent. Add to that the Volkswagen Polo is commanding a waiting period of close to three months without even selling as much only suggests some supply constraints from Volkswagen. The German automaker may have restricted supplies to make way for the new model.

The facelifted Volkswagen Polo could be launched within a week's time and will boast of more features. A more powerful powerplant could debut on the Polo but that is yet to be confirmed. The Polo is said to get a better audio system along with steering mounted audio controls. A price hike is unlikely as the Polo hasn't been doing very well, selling less than even the Vento in the previous month at just 2615 units.
